Oo the louse....

had, Too the daughter.

Ma, what do I buy with this?

Vegetable.

And what do I do with that?
Just chop it!

But how do I cook it?
Just sizzle it!

Then how do I eat it?
Just munch it!

How do I sleep, ma?
The way you wish...

And how do I fart then?

Dhum... Dhish!

Just like plays, films, concerts, painting exhibitions etc. are the things that give pleasure, relief and happiness to us adults, the same role is played by stories in the lives of children. On the basis of this I can say that Oo & Too is a great children's story. It gives the mind a rest, has play in its language, entertains and has some element of humour too. Eating, finding a coin, buying vegetables are such everyday activities that one does not have to load ones brains to understand them. So the story simply remains a story, it does not become a lesson. One does marvel, though, at the story-teller's ability to weave in such mundane acts like cooking and eating in the story so beautifully.
